Ornburn May Take

Active Charge of Winchester Strike

(Special to The Farmer)
New Haven, Aug. 21.—Mrs. M. Ornburn, organizer and member of the executive committee of the State Federation of Labor, who successfully engineered campaigns for better conditions in Bridgeport last summer, may take charge of the Winchester strike. The Federation is considering sending him to the assignment.
The lack of success in the early stages of the strike is attributed to lack of organization.

OUR NEWTOWN NEWS LETTER

(Special to The Farmer)
Newtown, Aug. 21.—The Sandy Hook baseball team defeated the Federal team yesterday afternoon by the score 11 to 0.
The newly elected officers of the Newtown club are: President, Mrs. James E. George; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Mary Warner; directors, Mrs. Harman N. Tiemann, Mrs. Anna B. Blackman, Mrs. A. E. Brinton and Mrs. W. C. Hawley; altar committee, Mrs. Charlotte Moore, chairman; Miss Julia Dineen, Mary Barrett, Margaret Beahan, Miss Johnson, May Hoyt, Lillian Dikeman, Martha George, May Fairchild, Ada Hurd, Florence Rutherford, R. La. Field and Miss Perrie.
The Ladies Aid society of the Congregational church will hold its annual sale of fancy articles, candy and other goods in the parlors of the church, Aug. 24, beginning at 9 o'clock. The proceeds will be given to the committee in charge of a fund-raising campaign to be held in the fall.

Mrs. W. L. Sanford and Miss Emily Sanford of Brooklyn are spending the week of their summer vacation at the club. Both were long residents in New York, where Mr. Sanford was in business for years and prominent in fraternal societies and politics.
There were no services at St. John's church yesterday, as Rev. C. A. Tibbels, the pastor, is away on his vacation.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Walker and Mr. and Mrs. John Lynch of New Haven returned to Newtown Sunday, and were the guests of Mrs. F. W. Campbell.

James P. Brennan of New Haven has joined his wife and son at their summer home near the station, for a vacation of a fortnight.

Miss Ella Smith left Saturday for a two weeks' vacation which will include Hartford and Lake George.

John C. Biers has returned from his vacation spent in the White Mountains.

Mrs. W. B. Glover and Miss Myra Warner were guests one day last week of Mr. and Mrs. E. Ernest Sanford at their cottage, Silver Sands.

L. D. Plumb and family of Bridgeport, who were guests for two weeks of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ruff, have returned to the city.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Clark and family motored to Middlebury Sunday, and spent the day at Lake Quaker.

Rev. Hyatt of Waterbury was a week-end guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Hyatt of the Glen.

Mrs. John has moved from Glen avenue, Sandy Hook, to the double house of the Morris Wire Co.

Miss Margaret Blake was a Sunday guest of cousins in Danbury.

Rev. James A. Boland of the State Anti-Slavery League has arranged for meetings for 8 o'clock Monday night in the Hawthorne chapel and later Glover's hall, Sandy Hook, to further the cause of the league. A. F. Coyle will be the speaker at both meetings.

His subject Monday night will be: "Moral Responsibility," and on Tuesday evening, "The New Town Worth." At the close of each meeting an open forum will be held.

Mr. and Mrs. O. Howard Hall have been entertaining Mrs. Hall's mother, Mrs. C. M. Lockwood of Bridgeport.

THE WEATHER

New Haven, Aug. 21.—Forecast: Fair tonight and Tuesday; not much change in temperature. Connecticut: Fair and continued warm tonight and Tuesday, fresh northeast to north winds on the coast.

A disturbance central over South Dakota is causing unsettled showery weather between the Rocky Mountains and the Mississippi river. Pleasant weather prevails generally in all districts east of the Mississippi. The temperatures continue high in the lake region but are somewhat lower in the western districts.

THOUSANDS AT CATHEDRAL AS PRINCES OF CATHOLIC CHURCH ASSIST AT MASS

Thirty Thousand Persons in and About Edifice As Solemn Ceremony Opens Catholic Week Conferences In New York—American Flags Are Entwined With the Papal Colors.

New York, August 21.—High Pontifical Mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral at 11 o'clock yesterday morning impressively inaugurated the Fifteenth Annual Convention of the American Federation of Catholic Societies. New York has never before witnessed a religious ceremony so beautiful in coloring, so magnificent in ritualistic pomp and so potent in its significance to the entire vast membership of the Catholic church.

Three princes of the church, Cardinals Farley of New York, Gibbons of Baltimore and O'Connell of Boston, participated together with the Apostolic Delegate, Archbishop Bonzano, representative of His Holiness the Pope, and priests and deacons from every quarter of the United States. By cable from Rome came the Pontiff's special blessing, which was read to a multitude who listened with bowed heads.

American Flags Freely Displayed.
One striking feature of the ceremony was its display of patriotism. The only external decoration of the walls was the American flag. It fluttered in the sunlight between the two spirals festooned the wide arches of the interior decorations, looped among the massive columns, but even there the Stars and Stripes showed foremost in the blend of colors. It crowned each loop of yellow and white and joined with little Papal flags in framing the great shields of the Cardinals and the Bishops of his archdiocese, that gleamed high on the granite pillars along the side aisles.

But the American flag was not the only token of patriotism that marked the impressive ceremonial. The first music that rang out from the Cathedral chimes as the worshippers assembled was "The Star Spangled Banner." Again, the same keynote was struck when Bishop Hickey of Rochester, stood, purple robed, in the tall white pulpit and with arms extended, thundered the declaration: "We want no Catholic political party in this country."

30,000 Seek Admission.
The crowd that sought admission to the Cathedral numbered close to 30,000, but there was no disorder. Acting Inspector Brady, with 50 policemen commanded by Capt. Thor, had no difficulty in holding the throng in check. It was a disappointed throng for the most part, because the 3,000 ticket holders practically filled the Cathedral.

As early as 9 o'clock Fifth and Madison avenues, with the side streets surrounding the Cathedral, were full of crowds. All the big Catholic societies—several in uniform—came marching behind flags and drum corps to the rendezvous at the Cathedral College, Madison avenue and Fifty-first street. Flags were waving from windows and housetops of hotels and residences.

As the crowd increased in numbers uniformed Knights of Columbus and members of the Catholic Legion joined forces with the police in straightening out tangles and in keeping the ticketless away from the Cathedral doors. The arrival of the German Catholic societies—several divisions handsomely uniformed and marching with the precision of soldiers—was one of the spectacular features of the early hours.

Promptly at 11:15 the ticket takers vanished from their posts, the police stepped back, the doors were thrown wide open and the public was given its chance. But it was a sorry chance; the interior of the Cathedral was literally packed with ticket holders. Every seat was occupied and a standing throng, tightly wedged, filled the side aisles from main doors to transept.

Crowd Witnesses Processional.
But the outside multitude was to have its reward. It was to be their privilege to witness the most impressive ceremonial in New York's history—the processional of prelates and delegates to their places in the Cathedral.

A sudden rush of police, which swept the crowd back from the Madison avenue sidewalk to beyond the curb, was the signal. At that instant the doors of Cathedral College opened and out stepped an acolyte bearing a massive cross of gold, and moving at the heels of the cross-bearer came first the women delegates representing leading societies, then the male delegates wearing badges, and next in line came the churchmen of the teaching and religious orders—Franciscans, Capuchins, Jesuits and others—while behind them moved the secular clergy in cassock and surplice, four abreast; hundreds of them drawn from dioceses as far afield as the Texas border and the Pacific Slope.

Following the priests came the Papal Chamberlains and the Monsignori, robed in purple; then the Titular Bishops, also in vestments of purple with the ring of office on their hands and the gold crozier gleaming in their breasts. Behind strode forty Bishops of Sees, robed as those who had preceded them.

The course of the procession was south on Madison avenue to Fifth street, then west to Fifth avenue and through the main entrance of the Cathedral.

As the Bishops of Sees passed the Archbishop's residence on Madison avenue, Archbishop Bonzano emerged, attended by assistant priests and deacons of honor, and joined the processional. Imminently impressive was the picture made by this representative of the Pope, as he moved forward with bowed head, his vestments of scarlet silk glittering in the sunlight. Two boys clad in velvet carried the long train of the Capra Magna that fell in scarlet folds from his shoulders.

As the Apostolic Delegate passed the first of the Cardinals appeared, attended by deacons of honor, appeared O'Connell of Boston. He went priests and Knights of Saint Gregory—the latter, laymen, wearing conventional evening clothes that looked strange amid the splendor of surrounding vestments.

There was a break in the procession of thirty yards or more—and then came the venerable Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore, his snow white hair gleaming like silver against the scarlet of his biretta. Followed close by his ecclesiastical suite the prelate moved with a tread that showed no weakness, although the pallor of his face, accentuated by the bright red of his vestments, caught the eye.

Another long break in the slowly moving column of prelates and then came the officers of the mass—Cardinal Farley and his assistants, the deacon and sub-deacon in vestments of red and gold. At the head of this group moved an acolyte bearing the double cross of gold, followed by Mgr. Lavelle, rector of St. Patrick's.

The processional passed through the heart of a dense crowd that stood in silence that was profound. Every head was uncovered as the Princes of the Church went by. There was no pushing, or elbowing, nothing save the tribute of reverence.

At the main entrance of the Cathedral Knights of Columbus stood in ranks of gold, followed by honor. Through the open ranks the procession passed up the centre aisle to the chancel. There the delegates found seats while the prelates took the places assigned them. Only a few laymen, honored for distinguished services to the Church, passed within the chancel. They were John D. Crimmins, Henry V. Cunningham, Thomas J. McParlan, Justice Victor J. Downing, Bernard Coleman, Joseph F. Frey, Dr. James J. Walsh, John F. O'Rourke, Eugene A. Philbin, Morgan J. Ryan, Thomas F. Hayes, W. Bourke Cochran, John J. McCrane, Anthony Malone of Chicago and James J. Ryan of Philadelphia.

These men, in evening clothes, were attached to the Cardinals and Apostolic Delegate as attendants of honor. Their own decoration was the gold cross of their order, which showed on each shirt front close under the white dress coat.

The other honored laymen were Fourth Degree Knights of Columbus—a small group of them—who stood in the main aisle on the threshold of the chancel throughout the service.

Each Cardinal Seated on Throne.
Cardinal Farley occupied the Ecclesiastical throne on the Gospel side of the high altar, at his left sat the Apostolic Delegate on a throne, draped and canopied with tapestry of Roman purple. On the other side of the chancel, directly facing Cardinal Farley and the Apostolic Delegate, were the thrones of Cardinals O'Connell and Gibbons.

Each prince of the Church was surrounded by his honor deacons and assistant priests—the whole, a marvelous blend of colors seen in the gorgeous vestments that never ceased to move as prelates and prelates officiated in the solemn ceremony.

Cardinal Farley was celebrant of the mass. His voice, although light, was singularly clear, carrying every word with distinctness to worshippers in all parts of the vast edifice.

Bishop Hickey of Rochester, a noted pulpit orator, delivered the sermon. It was principally an assault on divorce and Socialism. There was only one sentence that had a political flavor and might be construed as an attack upon the Wilson administration. This was a reference to the Mexican Revolution when he said:

"It is a matter of general information that across the border and at our very door indignities have been heaped upon bishops, priests, nuns and the people. What untold action have we taken in protest?"

Five Overcome by Heat.
To the intense heat torn of the procession, the discomfort occasioned by the hundreds who stood throughout the service, was due the only unfortunate happening of the day. Five persons were overcome and had to be carried under emergency treatment and left outside for their homes.

The officers of the mass were: Cardinal Farley of New York, celebrant. Assistant priest, the Right Rev. Joseph F. Mooney, V. G. Deacons of Honor—Mgr. Lynch of Ulster, N. Y.; Mgr. O'Brien of Kalamazoo, Mich.

Sub-deacons of the Mass—Mgr. Roach of Boston; Dr. Cantwell of Long Branch, N. J.

Preacher—The Right Rev. Thomas F. Hickey, Bishop of Rochester, N. Y. Assistants to Cardinal Gibbons: Assistant priest, Mgr. Edwards, V. G. of New York; Deacons of Honor—Mgr. Kaupert of Brooklyn; Mgr. Sheppard, V. G. of Newark, N. J.

Assistants to Cardinal O'Connell: Assistant priest, Mgr. Spina of Boston; Deacons of Honor—Mgrs. Delaney of Albany; Mgr. Wall of New York.

Assistants to Archbishop Bonzano: Assistant priest, Mgr. McNamara of Brooklyn; Deacons of Honor—Mgr. Baker of Buffalo; Mgr. Curran of Rochester.

Among the prelates who participated in this greatest ceremonial in the history of the American Catholic church were the following: Archbishop Edmond F. Prendergast of Philadelphia; Archbishop Sebastian Mesmer of Milwaukee; Archbishop Bruchesi of Montreal; Bishop Henry A. Gabriels of Ogdensburg, N. Y.; Bishop Hickey of Rochester; Bishop Thomas F. Cusack of Albany; Bishop John J. O'Connor of Newark; Bishop James A. McFall of Hartford; Bishop P. Muldoon of Rockford, Ill.; Bishop D. J. O'Connell of Richmond, Va.; Bishop J. F.
